THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

To the R E A D E R.

WHAT Dr. JOHNSON has observed, in the incomparable Preface to his Dictionary, concerning the Words of a living Language, viz. that while some are budding, others are falling away, may be applied with equal Accuracy to the Scenes, the Villas, and the Plantations of a Country; and hence, to the intelligent Tourist, a frequent Revision of a Work, which professes to give a Catalogue of such Objects, must appear not unnecessary. But independent of this general Observation, this little Volume has laboured under Disadvantages peculiar to itself. Those Parts of England which Mr. GRAY visited in Person, such as the rich Scenery of the Northern Lakes, and the romantic Beauties of the Wye, have been accurately and faithfully represented: but those Parts were, comparatively speaking, few, and Mr. GRAY had Recourse to the Taste and Judgement of his Friends to supply the Deficiency. From such Variety of Tastes, necessarily arose the many Imperfections which have crept into the Body of the Work. Every Individual would of course set down what appeared to him most worthy of Attention in his own Neighbourhood; but to judge with Accuracy of particular Objects, it is necessary to have a general Knowledge.

Et mores hominum multorum vidit, et urbes.

Such Knowledge is to be expected only from a few. Of the Taste of some of Mr. GRAY's Friends, there is ample Testimony; to one of them I am much indebted, as well on other Accounts, as for his Kindness and Attention, in having procured me a Copy of Mr. GRAY's Manuscript in the Possession of Dr. WYNNE.

When, however, I mention the Imperfection of others, I trust the Reader will not imagine that I am unconscious of my own. I am fully sensible that this Work still retains many Defects, nor should I have been induced to publish it, if I had not rested for Support on the friendly Assistance of a Right Reverend Prelate of our Sister Kingdom, who has for several Years, during the earlier Part of his Life, been accustomed to relax his Mind from severe Study, by visiting the beautiful Scenery, and venerable Antiquities of Great Britain

Britain. Most of the Ground trodden by his Lordship I have with Pleasure re-trod, and though I have sometimes found Occasion to add to his Observations, I have seldom seen the Necessity of differing from his Judgement. Still, however, I am conscious that much is omitted; but the Reader can judge only by Comparison of what has been done, and perhaps the County in which I am now writing, will afford a strong Case in Point. To reach Perfection, is a Work of Time; to have removed some Rubbish from the Road, is not altogether to have laboured in vain.

THO. NORTHMORE.

ADVERTISEMENT,

by the former Editor.

THIS Catalogue was originally written on the blank pages of Kitchen's English Atlas, by Mr. GRAY. His own extensive researches into the topography of this island furnished him with many of the particulars; the Summer tours which he made supplied him with more; and to these he was frequently adding, from the information of such persons on whose taste and judgement he could best depend.

A few copies were first printed, and interleaved, with a view that those, to whom they were presented, might at their leisure, make such short remarks as their own personal knowledge of the several counties enables them to do; and in these to add or expunge what they may think proper. Because, as, on the one hand, it is possible some places worthy of note may be omitted, so, on the other, some may be mentioned which are hardly deserving of the traveller's attention. The excellent person before-mentioned, who made the Catalogue, was apprehensive prehensive of this ; and was therefore far from thinking his manuscript perfect. Yet, as many of his friends had transcribed it in his life-time, and many more have requested copies since his decease, it was thought best to print it in this pocket form ; not only for their present gratification, but as the most likely means of rendering this little work complete, and of fitting it hereafter for the eye of the public.

The present prevailing passion for viewing and examining the beautiful scenes which abound in our native country, precludes every necessity for an apology for the publication now offered to the World, and the name of the Compiler will secure to it a favourable reception. What Mr. GRAY thought important enough to engage his attention, those for whose use it is intended will not receive with neglect. Scenes, Situations, Seats, and Antiquities, selected as worthy of notice by the elegant Author of the Church-Yard Elegy, will be visited with a degree of respect unfelt before. From his taste no person will venture to dissent, and to his judgement few but will readily subscribe.

As the present Catalogue was compiled several years since, some alterations, by change of property or by deaths, may have happened in

in the names of the owners of particular seats—these however can be but few, and, it is presumed, of no material consequence; but as the Publisher wishes to be accurate, he will very thankfully receive any corrections which may render the Work more perfect, and by that means more useful.

This Mark (*) placed before any place, denotes that it is more particularly worthy of Notice.
